

leigh+on safe
Working Together

Contractor of the Month

December 06

GAY CONSTRUCTION

Not long to go before we sit down for that traditional Christmas lunch which never seems to end, play with the kid's new toys (due to not receiving any yourself) and sing all those lovely carols.

For some reason December has just flown. I was always of the understanding that as we approached the Christmas break, things were meant to get a whole lot slower. Well that wasn't the case. I'm convinced that the last two weeks of this month have been the most hectic I've experienced on this project. And in looking around, I wasn't the only one.

Now in saying that, there have been some quiet parties I and others have had to attend (you know do the right thing); with some still to come. I was impressed to see the way that both Leighton people and the contractors put safety above all else at these functions. Not necessarily the manner in which they walked (crawled & or slid) out of these functions, but in that no-one endeavoured to drive home.

This month saw the start of the structural steel probably the highest safety risk on the project at present. Gay construction (whom are erecting the steel) are conducting themselves in an extremely professional manner.

We've seen Pryme remove the last bits and pieces, along with Mo's Roofing getting up and going. Now if you asked me what were the high risk trades (in relation to safety) on the project, I would tell you all three above. Totally due to the task and activities they undertake. Yet to date these contractors have shown commitment to working safe.

So to the issue in hand, Contractor for the month of December goes to "Gay Construction".

Leighton Contractors wish to congratulate Richard and his team who have worked on the Green Square Project. It is a delight to see the professionalism shown by Gay.

Until next month good reading and work safe.

